GENERAL INFORMATION

Vikram was a wealthy businessman who owned a popular chain of sports stores called PQR. PQR has branches all over India and over the past couple of years has become the household name for sports gear. They have all types of outdoor and contact sports equipment and outfits. Vikram passed away a year back without leaving a will. His children Sameer and Vinita soon took over the business after Vikram's death and became equal shareholders of the company holding 50% of the shareholding each.

Over the past year, Sameer and Vinita realized running the business together was very difficult as both of them had very different ideas on how to take the business forward and it was affecting their relationship.

Sameer and Vinita agree that current market conditions are perfect to expand their business. Sameer feels PQR should also venture into avenues such as indoor games and video games. He feels the demand for indoor games and video games has surged post the pandemic and finds it a good investment to make.

Vinita wants to expand in the field of outdoor sports itself and wants to open rental space for games like futsal, cricket, etc. She believes this would be highly profitable as more people are becoming health conscious and are taking up such sports as stress busters and developing a healthier lifestyle. Vinita also is very adamant about this idea as Vikram had passed away due to a sudden heart attack due to unhealthy habits.

Sameer is the elder brother and is over-protective of his sister both personally and professionally. Vinita was sick and tired of being bullied by her elder brother even as a child and now in relation to this family business decision. They are equal shareholders and have reached a deadlock.

Sameer and Vinita understand that both of their ideas would require huge investments and are unable to conclude which of the two to go with. On the advice of their legal counsel, they are attempting mediation in the presence of 2 mediators and their respective legal counsels to resolve the dispute.
